Entry requirements / prerequisites

To be eligible to attend the course, nominees must fulfil the following criteria:

- Bachelor's degree in military science or from a civilian university
- Basic computer skills and the ability to engage in e-learning

The course is intended for military and other official personnel who have no prior experience in working in a staff in planning or command tasks. National Defence University students have priority.

The course will be taught in English and requires good academic English skills. Although students are expected to have prior studies in military, all students will complete a pre-task on the basics of insurgency and counterinsurgency warfare so as to ensure a common basis. (English language proficiency as described in STANAG 6001: listening 2, speaking 2, reading 2, writing 2. Language testing is a national responsibility. No additional training or translation will be provided.)

Course content, progression and methods

The course builds on prior academic studies and professional experience as a military instructor or subject-matter expert. Alternatives will be designed for students who have not worked in or with armed forces.

Lectures, case studies and scenarios provide students with a basic understanding of the different functions found in international staff headquarters. The size of teaching groups varies from small groups to all students enrolled on the course. In the initial stages of the actual exercise, students are divided into different sections of a headquarters where students then rehearse their own task according to a scenario. Students then apply what they have learnt and the staff planning procedure will be looked at comprehensively.

In the first phase we familiarize ourselves with the concepts of comprehensive crisis management and security and with various perspectives on training in the different stages of an operation. The first phase consists of lectures and e-learning. In the second phase, lectures and case studies provide students with a basic understanding of the different functions found in international staff headquarters.
